NOTES:

Due to the number of customer requests, and because we still have seed in the freezer, we will once again have a limited number of seedlings available the next few seasons. This year, the cedar are bare-root 1 year old seedlings as plugs and should be planted in a spot protected from the deer, perhaps a fenced garden, at least 8 - 10 inches apart. Then in a couple of years they will make good transplants. We have also had success in keeping the deer away from them when they are young by spraying with deer repellent after planting, or dipping the tops in deer repellent before planting. During the winter when vegetation is scarce, seedling protection from deer browsing, rabbits, voles, and mice is essential. Fence and mouse bait have been helpful. Western redcedar is beautiful in all evergreen value added products because it holds its needles well, drapes beautifully, and is nice in landscapes as it recovers without breaking in ice storms. Cedar grows one to three feet a season and once tall enough the deer leave it alone. We have not found insect problems in these trees and have some growing for 20+ years (maybe a cedar chest someday!) Redcedar ranges between 40 and 150 feet tall and there are specimens in the world around 900 years old.
